

Your typical pregame meal should always consist of foods that are readily digested and are able to contribute to the energy and fluid requirements of your game. Typically a meal high in carbohydrates and low in lipids (fats) and proteins would be ideal. An example of such a meal would be some sort of pasta dish. This meal should be consumed approximately 3 hours before competition to allow for proper digestion and absorption.